ESSAYS ON THE FUTURE OF THE WTO

The World Trade Organization has aroused interest and raised controversial questions. It attracts the attention both of champions of globalization and apologists for sovereignty and the nation state. The debate has triggered much discussion. It relates to a multiplicity of disciplines (including economics, international law, sociology, political science and philosophy).

The present book, consisting of two volumes, seeks to offer its readers targeted analyses of key issues of the WTO system which constitute the core of the Doha Round.

Government-sponsored social labels constitute an interesting attempt to break the deadlock grown within the international organizations involved – in particular WTO and ILO – in order to effectively deal with minimum social standards through trade-related measures.

Human rights, social rights, WTO rules, corporate social responsibility, globalization, extraterritoriality and international dispute settlement are some keywords to describe the important content of this book.

While using the example of the recently issued Belgian Law on Socially Responsible Production and its voluntary social labelling scheme, the author unravels the trade-labour nexus, chases away some jurisprudential fog that surrounds it, highlights the importance of problems of international forum choice in addressing it and, finally, suggests a way forward through a variety of inter-institutional arrangements and re-forms.
